

I strongly oppose the imposition of a hardware solution to prevent piracy of digital broadcasts. This heavy-handed solution, like many others that have been proposed, would benefit content producers at the cost of trampling on the interests of users. Admittedly, this needs to be addressed, but I am confident that the federal government can do better. This is the type of solution an elementary school class would have come up with.